It's not unfair, both teams can do it and both really have an equal advantage/disadvantage for using it. The unfair thing to do is fix it, because it removes the equality of those advantages.

And fixing it brings back the same equality as before it was being used/exploited.

It's a bug, bugs get fixed. It's unwise to rely on the existence bugs, because then you get situations like this.

Part of what makes ren so entertaining are the strategic possibilities. (and the c&c aspect ofcours, but that's aside here)

If I didn't know about this bug, and join a game with someone on the opposing team who does know this bug and how to exploit it he gets a certain advantage over me that wasn't intended by the game creators.

I strongly believe that fixing this bug will cause a great deal of people to revise their strategy for the better, and that will make the game more interesting/competing, whereas some games nowadays are over too quickly due to balance issues to the gameplay (partly because of this bug)

Think about this, try to grasp the concept of a bug and try to see my point here.
