I am definately betting on something this week, I am the luckiest of lucky. (Ok, maybe not the luckiest, but it's still a sweet camera.)

Last week I drove to a nearby town. The town is surrounded by tall hills and mountains, and you can have a very pleasant hike down any of the numerous trails there. Anyhoo, I was climbing one trail and enjoying the good weather when I saw what looked like a silver box. When I approached, I saw it was a digital camera. Score!

It's a 3.3 mpixel powershot S20! Slightly scuffed, but otherwise fine. It rained the next day, so I was really lucky to get there when I did. When I got home, I also saw it had a 300 mb flash media card inside! This is like a 300 dollar value, (ish) I pity the fool who dropped it so carelessly. I hooked it up to my computer with the aid of a friend who has a similar model, and Canon, being the big company that it is, just happens to use the same USB cable for most of their cameras. Gotta love it. Anyway, just wanted to share. It also had some cool pictures of the large forest nearby one of the trails on it, and though I've never been in the area depicted, I have flown over the tower shown in one of the pictures. Those I'm putting those up in this thread, hence the warning to 56k users. Some of them are kind of blurry, but I felt like being thorough. (sp?) I don't have my own hosting, so I resized these and compressed them to avoid straining good ol' image shack.

Some awesome shots, though I don't think the skill level of the photos coincides with the price/abilities of the camera. Aircraftkiller, you being our photos guru, care to comment?

Thanks for wasting however many seconds of your life it took to read/look at all the pretty pictures.

- Tar

You could always send me that camera, I could use another one. I'll send you my own little present which is an Olympus 2.0 megapixel camera that can develop its own photographs when you insert a type of Polaroid film for it.

Some of those images look beyond fucked up. I can almost feel evil in the air from looking at them, gives me a creepy feeling. It's almost like the camera owner was running from something. Why the fuck else would he leave a camera like that in a forest that looks spooky as hell?

There's something incredibly uncomfortable about those woods...great pictures, though.

I don't think that's a mirror, looks more like a painting to me, but that house it is in seems to be inverted maybe five times.

Yes, I also recommend printing a couple of those pictures with the silhouette in it and showing them to the police, tarsonis.

Now, my rationale for why this camera has the pics that it does is some kids were out making reference shots for a horror movie, reminiscent of the Blare Witch Project.

However, I still think you should go to the police and tell them what you found, I bet those kids are probably aching to have their camera back. It was a lucky find, but something that expensive I think should be handed back.

No, those silhouettes blend in far too well to be photoshopped, and the whole line of pictures looks like someone snapping photos as they are running, possibly stopping at points to get a better shot, which makes me think of reference shoots for a horror movie, but I still think it should be turned in to the police, whoever lost that came is probably quite saddened.

If you ask me It looks a little TOO much like blair witch, I think someone may have been trying to recreate it for some fame.

For some reason, it reminds me of Far Cry especially that pic of the weird building, you know the level where you are on the treetop thing and everyone below you is being killed in a fight with those trigent monsters

For those of you who hadn't noticed...

Thats spooky stuff. It could have been photoshopped, but who would go out, take like 30 cool pictures, and then photoshop a zombie in some? And if they were reference pics for an amateur film, they wouldn't have taken pics while running, or with the camera at ground level.

Also, the question of whether the first pic I reposted was a painting or something, who would have a painting in that shape, in the top of an observation tower, on the ceiling? I think its probably a mirror, though I can't really explain why that would be there either.

Reference pics could have been taken while running, as a note that the camera should be moving especially quickly in that scene. They could also be at ground level because it builds suspense, and the movie camera should be there, too.

And if that mirror is on the ceiling, wouldn't it mean that the guy shown in the mirror would be lying face-down?

But that leaves out the possibility of tarsonis9 being the one who photoshopped them. And actually, you can put any images on the camera. So you could take pics, throw in a zombie guy (though not as well as is done here), put the modified pcis on the camera, and leave it somewhere. But that'd be a huge waste of money.

Here is my Proof:

As you can see, there are a large ammount of pixels concentrated in that area. They are also concentrated in an almost perfectly rectangular space. It looks like someone just dumped them in there, and forgot to fine tune it.

Anyway, it is likely that this was photoshopped, but whoever did it must be a guru at altering images, and even if (s)he was that good, it would take an enourmous amount of time to actually make it look that real.

Alot of these pictures would be extremly hard to spot, i cannot say myself that many of these can be faked very easily with photoshop.

I have tried many filters , such as find edges, emboss, solerize, and many others, but every differnt tool seems to still pick up the shadows as if they are actually in the image.

Given the presence of an old castle, I'm guessing it was in England or at least Europe... maybe it was this guy's camera.

z310tooncyPeople, they're FAKE! I'll admit, it was a nice hoax, but it's FAKE.

Here is my Proof:

As you can see, there are a large ammount of pixels concentrated in that area. They are also concentrated in an almost perfectly rectangular space. It looks like someone just dumped them in there, and forgot to fine tune it.

Even at that, the pixles could represent the body of the thing

Look at the KGBspy's picture. It should be easier to see it. I really doubt that any animal would have a almost perfectly square body.

You know, he said he shrank the images. I'd be interested in seeing the originals.

I can find nothing in snopes about this being a copycat hoax, so that's good... how was the camera found? Was it placed neatly on a rock or log, or was it laying in the middle of a path?

There's something incredibly uncomfortable about those woods...great pictures, though.

I don't think that's a mirror, looks more like a painting to me, but that house it is in seems to be inverted maybe five times.

It does look like a picture with a reflexion on it.

htmlgodAlso, the question of whether the first pic I reposted was a painting or something, who would have a painting in that shape, in the top of an observation tower, on the ceiling? I think its probably a mirror, though I can't really explain why that would be there either.

SuperFlyingEngiAnd if that mirror is on the ceiling, wouldn't it mean that the guy shown in the mirror would be lying face-down?

It looks like that was the top of the tower, if that mirror/picture is a mirror it could be to show whats up there before the person gets al the way up.

Tar, is that the order that the pictures were in the camera? Maybe theres a story line.

I wish there were places like that around here. I'd love to go around and explore those kind of sites. By the way, this is my favorite website of all time, this guy goes through abandoned places (factories, hospitals, whatever), posts pictures. Many of them are said to be haunted. Here's the page I like viewing the most off of the site: <http://www.forgottenoh.com/abandoned.html>

I live in ohio. There is shit like that all over. Directly behind my house is a huge area of woods. There are a few burnt down houses and other stuff back there. They have been desecated like the building in those pictures. Alot of the buildings are small houses and little shacks. I have no clue how long they have been there but by my estimate pretty old.

Walking through them at night is pretty creepy , Even with one of those huge water proof flash lights (the huge batterys). Ive never seen anything or anyone else down there besides woodland creatures. (Deer , Skunks , Racoons ect..) I guess Ohio doesnt suck that much.

I have seen stuff like this:

<http://www.forgottenoh.com/OldXenia/oldx10.jpg>

I se more of not abandoned buildings but more burned down buildings in the middle of no where.

I beg to differ there (if thats the right phrase) The predator hunts to prove it's No: 1 It collects the skulls of its prey as trophes of its kill in the 1st 2 films but in the latest film it marks itself with the aliens blood as its trophy so to speak.

God! some of you guys should get out more.....why would someone bother to take the pictures, photoshop them, and put them back in the camera and leave it in the woods for someone to find...

with the risk of it: a) Not being found at all, b) being found by someone who couldn't give a shite what was on it and just happy they got a free digital camera or c) in being destroyed by rain....all in an attempt to hoax some boring blair witch style crap. What a waste of a digital camera!

It is either - the guy who "found the camera" has gone out to the wood taking some "interesting" photos (either getting a mate to pose or photoshopping them) and posting them on this board to entertain you suckers....

Or he really did find a camera that some poor unfortunate art student lost in the woods.

God! some people need to learn how to read... It is already known that it's a great hoax, that is at the moment going around every forum there is out there.

MistressIt is either - the guy who "found the camera" has gone out to the wood taking some "interesting" photos (either getting a mate to pose or photoshopping them) and posting them on this board to entertain you suckers....

It's neither, the guy who found it, just copied it from a different forum. Although it's almost certain that the first finder, was the guy who edited the picture.

Get educated.

It's widespread and a lot of people actually take it serious at first. The fact that people on a lot of forums take it serious at first and the fact that it looks like the maker actually took some time to make it, makes it to my opinion a good hoax. At least it's better than some other crap I get per email.
