

---

Subject: Sorry, clicked the "Add New Topic" Button too much

Posted by Anonymous on Thu, 02 May 2002 06:35:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

LOL- Its all good, last night I got the dis-honor of playing with her and against her for about 6 games total in a 40 player room. Everybody was flaming her and it was kinda funny. I also ended up MVP 3 games in a row in the game that she was in. She was no big deal on the field, just another player. I was sure to tell everybody not to fix her. And also I had some of my other friends online pushing her into harms way and blocking her in until she dies.. It was a great site. But 1 point I sort of agree with her about, winning is about points, and playing for yourself (playing for points, but not meaning refusing to fix people) is the only option if you are on a team of newbies. If there are 4-5 snipers hidden around the map Field, and your teammates keep making MRLS and getting slaughtered, you have a right not to play as a team and fixing them would be pointless. But having a team of noobs is maybe 1 in 4 games on average

---