

---

Subject: Your religion?

Posted by flyingfox on Fri, 01 Oct 2004 19:23:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

bigejoe, i won't debate the big boom theory. knowing little about the solar system (as one does), i have a theory that (edited out, i don't think it's accurate from reading up on it). does the bible even talk of space?? also, as far as planets go, what we DO know is that in either of the other surrounding planets, most of them are either too cold or hot for prosperity.

The bible isn't even that specific on it, it just says "in the beginning, God created the heaven and earth". now i'll agree that there are things we cannot and probably won't be able to explain for a long long time. but why is it the bible talks of God saying let there be light, and there was light; if we can now prove how light and dark exist, doesn't that make that part of the bible a lie and put the whole context of the bible into question? If it lies from the start, who are we to trust the rest of it? I'll say again, the bible is an educating book (from what i have read so far) to read but what one such as myself must remember is that there are educated truths we know, that the bible speaks of otherwise. On a human level, such as the story of samson and delilah, it's good read.

remember the story of a man who created a pathway through the ocean for people to escape through, which then collapsed back down on the pursuers? god seemed to be ever present in this time, and miracles seemed to happen.. why do they never happen now? The bible talks of the need to remind people that he is the one true god. if this is so, why are there no reminders now of who we should keep our faith in? there are too many holes and questions people cannot answer. as for your first section of reply, i value your choice of thinking for yourself so don't take this is a challenge to your faith.

---