Subject: The WMD and terrorist ties that didn't exist...or did they?
Posted by warranto on Sat, 09 Oct 2004 19:29:57 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

hydra1945warrantoWho here is defending Saddam? I'm not, I don't think Javaxcx is. Infact, I don't think anyone wanted him to ramain in power.

It still doesn't make it right to do so through illegal means.
If you're so worried about "international law," why aren't you as angry at Iraq for disobeying numerous U.N. resolutions and playing footsie with weapons inspectors for 12 years? You're willing to forget all the bad and illegal things Saddam's regime committed in an attempt to weaken the legitimacy of the Iraq war.

You're attempting to weaken the force that is trying to remove Saddam. Therefore, you're defending him.

Something else to think about: If Saddam's removal was "illegal," then the U.N. has an obligation to place him back in power.

Do you really want that?

Quote:America is a threat to people right now.
If you mean terrorists when you say people, you're right.

Quote:You and Nodbugger are amazing.
I'll take that as a compliment.

I never ONCE stated that I wasn't "angry" at Iraq for breaking the law themselves. However, that is a moot point, and only shows a desperate attempt by you to avoid the topic at hand. It was NOT America's responsibility to police the world, regardless of the UNs ineptness to do its job. Iraq broke the law as well, yes. I never once stated otherwise. However, America broke the law as well, and no amount of "Look, he did it too!" is going to change that.

I am NOT trying to "weaken the force that removed him", however as I continuously state, that DOES NOT mean America didn't break any laws as well.

No the UN does not have an obligation to put Saddam back into power. What they would have an obligation, if any, to do would to discipline America for its actions; but you know as wel as I do that the UN won't do anything.

...wow. I can't believe you think everyone that is not an American is a terrorist. You did say that after all...

Quote:Quote:America is a threat to people right now.
If you mean terrorists when you say people, you're right.

After all, America has the potential to launch massive nuclear srikes at ever country in the world, so they are a threat to everyone in the world. What is more amazing, however, is that YOU actually think everyone in the world is a terrorist. We can only hope you're never in charge, because I'm sure you would be that person that DID launch the WMD's America possesses.