Hi, I think I can clear up this misconception for you;

you see, renguard was made by people who considered texture files to be skins. apparently a bearskin or furry bag is similar to digital data on computers that make character models look like they are wearing clothes, garments or other coverings over their model face. they are called skins because models don't have any skin, therefore the texture you put onto them is their skin; they have nothing underneath. the stuff you downloaded probably included some of these bearskins, but you may take comfort in knowing all you have to do is examine your data folder inside your renegade folder and remove any files with a .dds or .tga extension after them, except "gamespy.tga" cuz' you need that for something.

there, hope I cleared this up.
