

---

Subject: OT: Yahoo! vs. XFire

Posted by cheesesoda on Mon, 14 Mar 2005 04:44:20 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

flyingfuckI don't know what he responded with, the first time or the second.. so either he made a really kick ass argument, done a good job of insulting me, or both - i'm guessing the latter. He was right about that one. I did make a kick ass argument then insulted him. The rhetoric was just for fun, though.

flyingfuckeither way, he seems to put more emphasis on it being an argument, than what the argument is about. after about a thousand posts of this you kind of get the drift of what the person is like.... there's never any benefit in arguing with these people or getting to know them, because they suck cock and just plain like to insult you. why read his posts at all?? they're a waste of time, they reek of someone really bored or unemployed or something.

What's wrong with liking arguments? I don't go searching for them, they come to me, and with tons of idiots like him, they come in abundance.

If I remember correctly, I proved my point and then insulted him. It was sort of a killing two birds with one stone. It's much more fun that way.

flyingfuckbesides, my point was kind of made.....TWICE.... it's a pointless program and this is a pointless thread. the idiocy of many Xfire users is shown in that petition -- do you really think some e-mails and messages of a web page will stop them? sure, maybe if Yahoo were wimps.... in which case they wouldn't have filed a suit in the first place. just use your head...

I just love how his thoughts contradict numbers. If it was such a pointless program, over a million people wouldn't use it. You'd think that after the first few thousand it'd die out because it sucks, but apparently it can still suck and reach over 1 million users!

---