Over in the US Religion has become not just taboo, but to the point where... I can't beleive I'm using this analogy. It's exactly like Lord Moldevort in Harry Potter. If I say Christian in the middle of a class. It goes silent and I get disciplenary action for being "insensitive". That isn't hyperbole. That is a common occurance.

I have no clue what you are talking about. That smply does not happen in schools in the US.

In England it isn't a big deal either. Its the same shit over there, only that they have Religious Education where they teach about all the major religions. (They throw in Atheism there too briefly)
