Which is all well and good if that's the way you choose to browse websites. Not everyone does it that way (I don't - the 10 or so sites I visit first thing daily I do sequentially)

You really seem to have trouble with the whole "personal preference" thing. Anything that isn't "yours" is not just wrong, but appears to be some kind of abomination in your eyes, and has to be derided at every opportunity.

That's just plain...weird.

I prefer Firefox over other browsers. It doesn't mean I go round saying how awful "Internet Explorer" and "Crapera" are.

I prefer 3D Studio over other modelling packages. It doesn't mean I go round saying how awful "XShlte" and "Mayass" are.

I prefer UE3 over other 3D engines. It doesn't mean I go round saying how awful Source and whatever the BF2 engine is called are.

(My apologies - I couldn't think of really lame names for those two)

Maybe it's just me. I really can't comprehend the level of fanaticism you have over your own personal preferences.
