yea, biking is feasible when I work in a factory 10 miles away and start at 7:00am[/sarcasm]

Crimson wrote on Sat, 09 July 2005 18:09I live in a huge, spread-out city with very little "downtown" to speak of. Mass transit here is useless and generally occupied by the scum of society. This is a city of 2-3 car garages and not many high-rise apartment complexes to speak of. Essentially, you MUST have a car here. Another factor is that it's so unbelievably hot in the summer that walking regularly would turn you into a walking melanoma.

I hate the gas prices, too... 50 bucks a week to fill my 20-gallon minivan tank, but at this point it's still affordable to me.

Its the same for me. Aside from the minivan part.
