A bit out of order, but whatever...
CrimsonSo, in 'proving' that nothing else could have possibly "caused" all of this to come into existence, what is the "cause" that brought this "god" figure, or mover, into existence?
CrimsonCausality is a human concept. You can't use a human concept to prove a supernatural concept.
Likewise, you cannot disprove the existence of God/a supernatural concept using a human concept such as causality if God supposedly created it in the first place.
God's nature is not dictated by our science; He created it in the first place, so He is obviously not bound by His own creation's laws.

That's why you can't really say, "If God caused all this, then what caused God?" because nothing has to have caused God.
Was our physical world and nature suddenly dictated by the virtual laws governing Renegade when it was first created? Of course not. We are independent from the game's laws and mechanics as God is independent of this world.