I'm just glad that I have a lot of control over myself when it comes to gaming. Even though I love playing games, I don't play them frequently. Even when I got Half-Life 2, I played it for maybe two to three hours a day for six days until I beat it. Now I rarely play it (except for Garry's Mod). I only spend about four hours a week in Garry's Mod. It's extremely fun and pretty addicting, but just like any other game or mod, I can't stand playing for a long time... it just gets boring for a while if I play after a certain period of time.

MMORPGs are dangerous though, and a lot of times I'm afraid to play them. I despise World of Warcraft though, it doesn't appeal to me at all. The only MMORPG I have really played (for about a month) was Face of Mankind. It's addicting, but I didn't waste too much time on it. But, when I once tried the Star Wars Galaxies trial, I was just plain addicted for the whole trial period. I spent about half of the day on it every day. I never bought it though.
