And all that is true.

However, I do want to stress that it is not the system itself that is flawed. It's the management (or rather, mismanagement) that has caused it to "fail" as it seems. The system does, and can, work. It just needs to be managed in such a way that allows it to succeed.

The system, for all intents and purposes is perfect. However, even a perfect system can fail when not run correctly.

On that though, we now have a conservative minority government, and Paul Martin is stepping down
