Probably the only thing I am looking forward to with Vista is to be able to enjoy HD movies, so I'll upgrade to Vista when I get a video card and monitor that are HDCP compliant.

HDCP, for those of you that don't know, is probably going to be a content protection system for HD movies. It will protect video as it travels from the transmitter to the receiver by encryption. It's going to make people who want to enjoy HD movies on their computers buy HDCP compliant parts (new video card, monitor, etc.) and use Vista. (Please correct me if I am wrong at all here.)
