Well, with my ex you have to add in the fact that he was drunk AND high and mere hours away from pointing the gun at his own head. He was literally getting his last meal delivered before he planned to go to a motel and shoot himself in the head. (A motel, because he lived in an apartment under his dad's house and didn't want him to have to deal with the cleanup)

The worst thing I have seen with weed, however, is that people who are on don't care about the consequences of their actions. I hate to use this same guy as an example, but he was, at this time, one of the assistant managers at the Domino's Pizza where we all worked. (I was the manager)

So, he had gone outside for one reason or another and those of us in the store locked the door so he couldn't get back in. It was stupid and funny because he had a key to the door in his pocket. But, instead of unlocking the door, he took this huge rock we used to prop the door open and hurled it over and over at the big steel door, leaving several dents in it. I don't know what he was thinking, but he obviously wasn't considering the consequences of his actions (such as the owner discovering it and making him pay for it out of his $6.50 an hour paycheck).

People who are high just act so relaxed and calm that I seriously doubt they could seriously react to something that needed them to be alert.
