I don't think you should have made this a public issue. Too many people are going to be immature about it, and there really was no point for a public apology. Some things are best if the masses don't know about them. This is probably one of them.

Other than that, there's not much to say. You haven't proven yourself to be an idiot, so there's no reason to expect that you have some expectation that you're going to be exalted for your confession. We all make mistakes, and the worst thing you could have done is to tried to apologize and demand forgiveness and pity. You showed some class and kept your dignity. I commend you for that because it's quite the rare thing in this community of immature idiots.

Like you said, just accept your 3 month ban and move on. Most will have forgotten in a week, anyways.
