

---

Subject: Re: The meaning of life?

Posted by cheesesoda on Wed, 25 Apr 2007 16:03:13 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

MexPirate wrote on Wed, 25 April 2007 11:50AoBfrost wrote on Wed, 25 April 2007 11:39Well, you see theres a problem, I'm not aiming toward any of you individuals, but I say that if you belive that you are truley catholic/christain then why believe in the big bang when they contradict what you claim you are, if your truley christain/catholic then you belive God made you , and not the way crap science brings out today, all of these big bang theory's are just taught in schools because some dont want to learn about creation, so then others who might want to are disabled from the ability to learn about it, teaching only 1 veiwpoint in school is what then make kids believe thats how the world started, schools today dont even give the chance to teach creationism anymore, I think schools should have 2 science classes during the time when they teach about evolution, 1 for evolution and 1 for creationism.

Flying spaghetti monsters anyone?

The problem is that if you choose to believe in a god/religion you shouldn't be forced to believe every single part of it, science allows for ideas and theories that are not set in stone - a scientist is happy to be proven wrong and theories such as darwins theory of evolution are being modified all the time to include new evidence and become as accurate as possible.

Creation can be taught in schools as part of religous education, it CANNOT be taught in the same way as evolution because it has no scientific basis only belief that is down to each individual.

creationism isn't a science, there is no evidence.

evolution is supported every step of the way from fossil records, comparison of species living today, microbiology, embryoligy and many other sciences.

Creationism is a farce. Science has given us a pretty accurate indication of what really has happened over the course of the universe's several billion year old existence.

I believe a higher being put it into motion, though. I'm not sure it's the Christian god, anymore. I know that there's something higher. There's too many signs of intelligent design. I'm still considering myself a Christian, but I have a lot of thinking to do on the subject to be sure.

---