After reading the countless topics you have created, and holding myself back from making a rude reply, I'm going to give you some well rounded advice that you should follow. If not, don't expect to get help here.

1. You need to type legibly. I as others are not going to take the time to help someone if we have to dissect pieces of your post.
2. You need to use the resources already given to you. You've been given one good resource already, Renhelp.net. If you can't seem to follow along with the tutorials there, ask for help on what you are having a hard time understanding. If you still cannot understand, maybe you don't belong in the modding world.
3. There is no need to make a million topics. You can use the same topic for all of these questions. Especially since none of your questions have been answered due to your lack of understanding, there is no need to make another topic.

You need to listen to the people helping you. You need to remember they know more than you do, and you're the one asking for help. With all this said, hopefully you can take this advice and help better yourself.
