warranto wrote on Thu, 09 August 2007 09:11 I've never turned to anyone for help. I am very much a "rely on yourself" type of person.... heck, I've never even had someone I looked up to; no "hero" of sorts.

I said "people at one time" for a reason.

Basically nowadays it doesn't matter if God exists at all, because there is more of a reason to get out of bed in the morning then there used to be. Tell me, if it was the 1600s, and your entire town had been destroyed, and you where the only survivor, and you were only 10 years old. What would you do? Can you still say that your a "rely on yourself" kind of person?

@ Sn1per74, Jesus was a smart man. He wasn't insane and he wasn't some random dude to wake up and say "Hey, I am going to say I'm God today"

He simply saw the horrors of the world and what the world was like without a reference or any sort of help. So he explained to people to live for something and they will get something.

Does it really matter if he is wrong? It gives people a purpose to keep moving forward. Doesn't matter if God exists or not, he was smart the way he handled it.
