Tell me how you can support the troops but not what they're trying to accomplish. The "we support the troops but not the war" is the most senseless campaign I've ever heard. You either support them or you don't, this middle ground people try to stand on simply does not exist.

And about the definitions of war... I'm not entirely sure about Iraq, but in Afghanistan it's not a war because frankly we're not at war with anyone. Saying that we're at war with the Taliban is no different than saying the Police are at war with the Hells Angels. The ISAF is just what the name implies - a security assistance force - obviously there to assist the government in regaining control and rebuilding the country. "War" is nothing more than a term used by the media to grab our attention right now.
