Subject: Re: Why the US really wants to go to war with Iran
Posted by R315r4z0r on Fri, 26 Oct 2007 02:20:51 GMT

prasp wrote on Wed, 24 October 2007 22:09The White House keeps on changing the reason on why the want to attack Iran. First they said Iran is trying to get nuclear weapons, even though Iran doesn't have the necessary infrastructure to support the development of a A-bomb. Now they're saying that Iran is supporting insurgents attacking it's troops in Iraq, even though last year it was generally agreed on that the US is caught in a civil war in Iraq and Iran is responsible for only about 4% of the attacks on its troops.

http://www.guardian.co.uk/comment/story/0,,2184077,00.html

The really reason why it wants to invade Iran is because Israel is afraid of Iran replacing it as the superpower in the Middle East.
Well, that is what they are saying. The real reason is because the US is trying its best to be the world's "International Peace Keepers."

Of course many people would like the US to pull out of the war like that snaps fingers, but that just wont happen. Do you realize how bad that would make the US look? To go in, mess around with the government, help in a war, and then just pull out without finishing things? It doesn't matter if there is any more positive gain for the US now, the point is we can't pull out until the job is done.

That is like borrowing money from someone, then while earning money to pay them back, you just quit and don't give them back what you borrowed... you just can't do that.