First, I find that image offensive as I am Christian.

Secondly, I see where this guy is coming from. Most people that want to do team tactics sometimes exclude rookies. They say APC rush, many new players don't understand that an APC rush also means engineers and technicians/hotwires. And many people kick rookies for doing things like camping, tunnel nukes, flaming APCs, and repairing the enemy. Instead of telling the people how they should play the game, they just tell them not to do things and then kick them before explaining them.

I think moderating a server should also include educating rookies on how to play instead of kicking them without fully explaining why they were kicked or giving them a chance to correct their mistakes.