In all fairness, I didn't either the first time I used it.

However, I was smart enough to know when a link was trying to access my IRC program, and when one was going to open a java application.

And what do you know... you require mIRC for the links to work... imagine that.
Well, if you click a link and it's going to irc://whatever, then you should learn like you did. Clicking on it initially, yes, one wouldn't know. Apparently he's been trying more than once, so one would think it would have sunk in before now.
