cheesesoda wrote on Sat, 17 November 2007 23:21 I don't condone the hatred. I have to put up with the rivalry within my own family, since my cousin is a die hard OSU fan, but it's not nearly that bad. My uncle helped out some OSU fans a few years back when they visited, and they all enjoyed themselves. My family isn't about the hatred for the other fans.. it's a shame that it exists, and if you go to Columbus next year, you'll see what I mean by Ann Arbor not being near as bad.

It's easier for you to think that Michigan fans were more drunk than you OSU fans were. I could believe it, but you do have to realize that we out numbered you guys quite a bit. Things are probably quite a bit different in Columbus.

I LOVE the shit-talking. As long as it's not done in a harassing manner, then it's fun. It's a football game, and you have to have some shit-talking. I mean, it'd be pretty boring if all the fans had perfect manners to each other.

Welcome to the Big House housing 111,900 fans for the game. If you expected to move about during halftime, you obviously don't understand the way football games work, let alone ones that work at the Big House. It's always packed. I make sure I piss as much as I can before the game and try to limit my trips to the bathroom just once during the first quarter. It's worked well so far. Today, my brother and I were able to get right to the bathroom.

I sat in Section 13, row 59.

I've been to a few Michigan games and Ohio State games in my time, never a Rivalry game. Out of all those games, I was easily able to get out, go to the bathroom, and get back in. Never ever, took more than 20 minutes before, lol.

Section 13? I was in Section 8, and I was looking your way quite a few times, might have saw you. I was in row 52, so you must have been right behind the End zone?

to Jecht,

Eh, you should have seen Hart at the beginning of the game, before kick off, Hart had to be held back when both teams were crowing both sides of the 50 yard line. Another thing I saw was Chris Wells getting run over blocking for Boeckman, I mean, he got ran over, lol.

I have to also agree (Cheesesoda), I loved the atmosphere, believe it or not. Well, the shit talking, at least, as long as it is all talk. I don't see anything worth fighting over, as in physically fighting. Yeah, I also asked my Grandpa if Buckeye fans were total assholes in Columbus with Michigan visiting, he said he'd never seen so much stupidity running around the Stadium. Though, he said he never witnessed car flipping or anything along the lines of that. I still believe that would happen, people are stupid.

EDIT: I'm not surprised one bit that this was the 2nd highest attendance. Although I didn't expect it to me, I knew there were going to be a lot of people. Haha, my Dad's side of the family is from Ohio, they are all, all, huge Ohio State fans, which my moms side of the family (Who all seem to have graduated from Michigan) hates. We usually all meet up a day before the game, and whoever has tickets will stay, and whoever doesn't goes back home. I like College Football because of the fans being patriotic to their team.

Hey, look at it this way, Carr, which I think he will retire, will mean you guys are looking for a new coach. From what I hear, Michigan is going for LSU's head coach Les Myles (May have spelled it wrong?). Les Myles will definitely beat Tressel on and off, at least that's what I think.
