Subject: Re: Cloning/Murder
Posted by BlueThen on Tue, 22 Jan 2008 23:46:14 GMT

Starbuzz wrote on Mon, 21 January 2008 22:53Originally Blue wrote on Mon, 21 January 2008 20:10How does religion make obedience and discipline bad? It's similar, if not the same, as a parent telling a kid to don't scream or a monster will show up.

It replaces the the common law of the land with a "god-given" law to promote divisivness and thus further conflicts and tension.

For example, to a Christian, the world is divided into believers and non-believers. And that those who do not accept Sir Jesus as their "personal Savior" are condemned to Hell. How pathetically selfish!

You call that law? It's nothing more than using fear to keep people in check.

Sure, it is fine with me if you and your kind choose to believe in something like that. It does keep a sort of raw peace (within yourselves) due to it crushing any type of invididual thought and exploration...but it divides humans accordingly.

You're going off topic, mate. Sure that part might be a flaw, but we're talking about how religion keeps people from murdering and stealing. The chance of hell scares me a lot more than a few days in jail.