I'm sure EA will still remain the major entity it is today. They will simply adapt, and perhaps mimic, and ape the 'Steam' model.

And you can't blame them for pressuring their developers to release stuff very quickly. Why? Because the customers demand the stuff get released fast.

Many 'gamers' I've met have a horribly short attention span, and lack any sort of real patience, or even the concept of patience.

You can go onto any thread about an upcoming game, and you'll see people screaming in Caps-Lock, 'OMG Y CANT THEY RELE AES IT NOW FUKING BUNCH OF MORNNS!' How about the freaking 'outcry' when GTA IV was delayed... instead of accepting that the wait will be a couple extra months, the internet was alight with XBOX nerds blaming Playstation 3, and the PS3 dorks blaming the 360...
