A) An attention-whore.

May be in the great USA.

well, is it so difficult to imagine, that some people are real?

You can see postings of Griever too in the picture section of the noobstories forum (n00bparty-pics).

Of course are they from one IP adress, because we live together and share one internetconnection with a router, you great sherlock holmes. And of course I play every night simultanous with two computers and two accounts. LOL

We dont have the need for attention, but because of people screaming "fake" all the time we thought it is necessary to post a picture. May be, some people needs this in young ages, but with 32 years I have real other problems then faking an account.

I stand by my statements, and if you are 32 years old you should certainly know by now that any female who posts their picture online, especially a gaming site, is going to be flooded with messages of either "omg ur hot can we fux", or "lol nice fake pic u fag", so why do it?

I fail to see how posting a pic of a girl dressed like she is in the Matrix or Underwold in any way proves that she is the "girl" behind her online nick, or even you posting afterwards saying "she is my GF" proves that she is your GF for that matter.

Again, I believe if you are 32 years old as you say, you should already know that most people don't believe most peoples identity, because so many people have scammed folks in the past. Nobody can even begin to count how many times someone has posted some random pic of a girl and claimed it to be themselves or their GF.

Its not your fault, and you should take offense at it either, it's just the nature of the internet. Hell, there are people that to this day don't beleive or know that Crimson is a girl, except the folks that have met her in person. Do you see me posting pics of her and saying "she is my GF"? No, because I know not to bother, and she or I could really care less what people most people think.
