moved to heated discussions for obvious reasons

I didn't read every post and don't really care. I made the website for The KOSs2 from scratch. If I ever leave The KOSs2, I wouldn't ask them to take it off. It's theirs now, I made it for them.

OK, it must be pretty sucky to put a lot of time in something and then have no gratitude at all for it. I can understand that. However, once you place your work on their servers, it's a risk you take. I don't suppose you have any written agreement that your work remains yours (or is yours at the first place) and that you can choose for how long they can use it?

The people that use it now, could however take it off out of courtesy and reverse back to an older template.

As to illegal use of forum software: there's plenty of free forum software out there (phpbb, fud, simple machines, ...).
