It will be interesting to see if this can make any dent in the Internet Explorer market share given that its got the marketing push of one of the few internet companies that the "clueless users" (those who think IE = the internet) have actually heard of.

It just needs google to use their marketing muscle to push it to these people.

If nothing else, it should spur Microsoft into working even harder on IE (one thing Microsoft doesn't like is to be beaten by Google)
