No matter what the true outcome is, all theories of time travel say that modifying the past cannot affect your present, in order to avoid the time paradox.

So, the only thing we could use travelling into the past for is for information and entertainment, right?

Even so, it could create chaos. Just imagine...A good portion of the world believes in divine creation, and another good portion believes in evolution. If you could go back in time and prove one, one way or another, I highly doubt that the people who were wrong would just say, "Oh. Okay then." Not saying that they'd revolt, but there was a lot of hostility just when teachers began teaching evolution, it could be quite worse if it was proven right or wrong...
