Heck, even my citizenship teacher, liberal, agrees that 12% of the budget just to pay for INTEREST in the loans we've been getting from China is pretty dumb. I don't want to have 25+ percent of the budget 10 years from now paying for interest for what we own China. That is precisely why I supported Paul Ryan's budget proposal. It would still have been a lot of spending, but GOSH IT WAS SHOT DOWN BY THE DEMOCRATS BECAUSE IT WOULD RAISE THE NATIONAL DEBT!!! FANCY THAT!!! Yet they supported Obama's budget even though it was projected to raise the debt 1 trillion more in the long run.

CHECKOUT THE HYPOCRISY!!!!

Yeah! Let's admit my mistakes while glossing them over and BITCH ABOUT SOMETHING THAT HASN'T HAPPENED YET!!!1!!one1!1

I hate to break it to you, Maud, but "Paul Ryan's" proposal (That WAS the budget proposal that didn't include any real numbers, right?) is kind of a joke. The Unfunny kind. Here's one of his graphs:

2080? Really? Republicans couldn't predict a budget accurately for the first half of Bush's first term. You're really taking their numbers seriously for the next 65+ years? GG to you for taking this bullshit seriously.

And of course, none of that changes any of this:

Dover wrote on Mon, 20 April 2009 20:34 The US has the lowest tax rates of the developed world, most protesters are getting lower taxes, and it's retarded to pin any of this on Obama since he hasn't actually raised anyone's taxes. People are quick to point out the "massive" government spending that our children will pay for, but for some reason don't like talking about Bush's massive government spending that's being paid for right now (Except cheesesoda, who as a non-hypocrite is more than happy to talk about it).

Your party lost. Accept it and get to work on a real way to fix your internal issues, instead of slinging shit haphazardly like monkeys on muscle relaxants. McCain lost his election bid partly because he focused on his opponent instead of fixing the gaping holes in his proposals. Have you learned nothing?
