

---

Subject: Re: School

Posted by u6795 on Thu, 14 May 2009 10:27:29 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

SSADMVR wrote on Thu, 14 May 2009 04:55 Yeah, I don't know what the situation in the USA is, but over here in the higher regions of education your future career will only be determined by your degree for as little as 10%. A high degree helps at your first job interview, for sure. But after you get that first job, it's going to be mostly about the experience you build and the things you achieve, they are vastly more important than your degree. At least, this is how it works in the business sector of the job market. In the 4 years it takes to complete your degree you will probably learn as much as you learn in your first year of actually having a job in the sector you studied for. I'm not saying a degree isn't needed, ofcourse it is, however it is not the sole factor that will determine your future prospects.

Of course. It is, however, a huge step in the right direction no matter how you look at it I suppose.

---