Seriously though I can't beleive there are so many intelligent views on this board. This was truly interesting to read through. I beleive in the theory of timetravel and many a time as someone mentioned earlier have thought, what if you went back in time and killed, not yourself, but your parents. Would the same effect be had? That you would change your mind or something would prevent you? If they were dead, you would not be born to go back and kill them. Have any of you ever seen the episode of the Twilight zone where a few gentlemen are debating time travel inside of a lobby, and the one man thinks time travel is useless, you couldn't change the past. Then while leaving he sees the butler and goes back in time. He doesn't know however that he wen't back until he asks someone the date. He finds out he's right in time for Lincoln's Assasination and is determined to stop it, but is arrested and no one will beleive him. Lincoln is shot, and he realizes it was true, you can't change the past.
