So I am told by 2 of my Brit mates in another European forum that one of them was stopped somewhere in Leeds by an officer who demanded they turn their t-shirt right side out to check what was written on it.

The t-shirt said "fuck your god." I am told the officer demanded so to see if the t-shirt would offend anyone else. Seems they just walked away saying something smart to the officer without complying with the order.

If so then that's what I would call a nanny government. Good thing is I am told this doesn't happen everywhere in the UK.
