I miss my online community so much! I love how my servers were still running and my community is still around despite me having been gone from gaming for so long. Lol atleast I haven't died!

But seriously yeah I'm so proud of the people who kept my servers going since i've been gone I honestly never thought that It would last without me just because the game was losing traffic but it's so nice to see how the online communities somewhat stuck together.

The one thing I definately don't miss is all the assholes in the Renegade community constantly judging and criticising eachother over stupid pointless things. But then again that was one of the reasons I loved having my own server and community because there was nothing like going from the renegade community back to my Kamuix server where I got along with everyone(even though I was the owner so everyone pretty much had to get along with me haha) and for the most part everyone in my server got along very well I mean there was a bit of drama but honestly it was NOTHING like the n00bstories community for example and others.

Like at the time 5 years ago or so I was really shy in person and my server and community was where my social life and honestly some of my best days were back when I had my online community and being creative with making serverside maps, mods and my own commands and whatnot. But yeah I loved my community and i'd go back and do it all over again if I could but there hasn't been a game like Renegade to do anything like that with as far as I know.