falcod wrote on Thu, 01 March 2012 13:21 I realise this is far too late, but you guys seem to have this misleading sense of justice is served thinking when all you've really done is similar to shutting down a homeless shelter owned by someone who bombed other homeless shelters.

i highly doubt the people you're trying to punish care very much at all, considering they simply pulled the plug on the ren server that easily and happily announced they are gonna have a new beginning on other servers and actively encouraged people to go play minecraft or tf2.. so all you've punished are the people who enjoyed the gameplay at renegade storm server.

I also don't understand why there is all this hate for the people trying to play there... does playing there somehow create ddos attacks on other servers or something? Do we become mindless supporters of evil just by playing there? Clearly no lol. As a matter of fact, most of the players didn't even know this was going on until we were rudely awakened by the harassment of players from other servers calling us terrorists before the situation was explained to us, hardly seems like we were actively committing evil acts.

I'm not saying there are no bad people on storm, but this guilty by association way of thinking has got to stop. I sincerely hope this doesn't happen again for any future scandals, because this type of approach doesn't really punish or stop the ones responsible, it just brings down the number of ren players more.

I said it many times and I'll say it again:

Yes, taking down st0rm servers off of XWIS has dropped the playercount (at this moment, they've taken their Ren servers down, anyway). However, if they really wanted to play at st0rm, they could just use GSA and direct connect through Renlist, RR, or RenIP or any other form of direct connect. St0rm players can still play on the server, if they were dedicated enough.

Here's the other side to this. Wilo made it near impossible for players to play at Jelly. His constant attacks on Jelly made it to where nobody could play a game. Now, leaving st0rm servers up on GSA was a grace for them; nobody was attacking them and they could still have players if their players wanted to connect via direct connect. Regardless of whether or not they were using DC or XWIS, Jelly players couldn't play.

I feel, a little, remorse for st0rm players. But, tbh, some part of me could care less because of what Wilo did to the other communities and how those players felt.

If you like Renegade as much as you probably do, you'll find another server to play in. Tbh, if you liked st0rm so much, you should have come up with a "useless" petition to remove Wilo from the throne of the st0rm community. If that happened, it's been stated numerous times that people would help out st0rm as long as Wilo is gone.
