

---

Subject: hmmm, i wonder why russia didn't want us attacking iraq

Posted by K9Trooper on Tue, 25 Mar 2003 04:22:26 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Ren Sizzlefab That's why I said without knowing how the firms were set up, it would be hard to say. Are they Russian owned firms with production located elsewhere? Are they foreign owned firms operating in Russia? There have been no details supplied any of this. And even if the Government did know, depending on the setup of the company, it would limit the actions available.

And yes, I'm sure the Government does have a lot to do with the creation of weapons and the commissioning of some of them, but that doesn't mean that they have control of the manufacturer of the weapons, or control over who they're sold to.

Umm the governments do have control over what is sold. Otherwise Iraq would have Tu. Bear Bombers. Or other countries other than the US would have F-117 Stealth Fighter/Bombers. The Gov. controls what kinds of weapons are sold. They would not want weapon manufactures selling them to the enemy. The Russian Gov. knew about it. The weapons are shielded under contracts and agreements written by the govt.

All companies that manufacture military grade weapons are required to submit sales documents to the Gov. This way the governments can track them, and make sure they are not headed to the enemy. At least that is how it works here. I can't imagine Russia being that irresponsible with it's weapons.

So again, this is a prime example of France, Germany and Russia trying to indirectly attack the US.

---