I don't see how it's a stretch. I find it impossible to believe that anyone could know everything about what's going on everywhere in a country, especially one as large as Russia. And I'm still to see any information about the Russian companies supplying the weapons, it's quite plausible that their operations are set up in one of the former Russian states, and not Russia itself. As I said, I'm not saying that the Russian government didn't know about it, I'm just saying it's possible they didn't. And as spotelmo has said, it's also possible that Russian intelligence was operating independently from the Government.
