Alright I have time to tell the History.

Ok in 1988 a low budget Japanese company (Forgot the name) released a game called Zero Wing in Japan for the Sega Genesis. It became a big hit in Japan so they wanted it release it in America and in Europe. But they needed soemone to translate to game from Japanese to English. But since they were a low budget company they couldn't spend alot of money for a professional translation. So what do they do. They go and hire a Japanese College student (keep in mind that the Japanese student is STILL LEARNING and being TAUGHT ENGLISH while in college) to translate the game for them. Well since A Japanese Student that does not know English and grammar all to well is translating a game from Japanese to English, it was release in America (And later in Europe) in 1989 with all those grammatical errors.

And that was the history on the game. Its just that like in 1996 (I think thats when that flash was made) someone learned the orgin of the game thouht it would be funny to to alter some pictures and make a funny flash movie out of it which they succeeded in. Not only did they make a funny flash movie they also made a new catch phrase out of it.
