I need some advice for hosting a web site. I've seen all these web hosts offering their services for "so-much a month/year", but some of them have crap deals, and you usually pay more for what you get.

I just need some advice as to what to look for. All I really need is a web site with about 100-200 MB web space, FTP access, CGI Script enabled and possible more.

Would it be better for me to just rent my own server, all would that be too expensive? I really don't know much about this stuff, I know there are people here very knowledgeable of this subject.

Depends on what your site is, if its just simple html pages with a few downloads.

Just get a small deal and upgrade as you need to.

Dont pay for more then you want, and dont get a server if you dont have a clue how to maintain it. Also if the site wont need a dedicated server, dont get one.

Small hosting deal, then upgrade as needs be.

Okay, so I just go for one of these small deals from some web host.

That's cool, thanks.

Well, the thing is, it's going to be used for commercial use, not a Ren fan site or anything. I was just looking around for a host for my Dad's business, and asking for any good suggestions.

Thanks for all the nice offers though, nice to see a supportive community.

Depending on the content of your site, its almost always possible to find someone willing to provide free hosting. Anything with under 10-15 mb of files, which is most sites these days, can get hosted somewhere. My recommendation would be find a forum of discussion about whatever the topic of your site is, and ask for hosting there after describing your experience in webdesign and anything related to your topic. I've probably gotten as good a service as I could pay for, maybe better, for Starwars Mod, and I've never paid a cent, nor have I had ads or popups on my site.

If I had to recomend a host, it would be wired-hub. No, they are not owned by me, or even operated by me. I had CNC Zone up with them for a long time. They are very reliable, and will help you out with whatever you need. Their support seems to always be there when you need them. The longest I ever had to wait was, I think, 1 hour (and that was because I put the support ticket at a low priority)

<http://www.wiredhub.net/>

Also, as England said check webhosting talk. But just remember, in most cases you get what you pay for.

fr0zenhost isn't controlled by cow, it's controlled by fr0zen. cow does have a tendency to act a bit childish, but in a professional setting he can be quite professional and mature on his decisions. i just wish he would act mature and professional all the time especially when he's trying to advertise.

But by getting all angry and typing in all caps isn't mature either. You weren't spamming and you were trying to prove that, but you could have said, "I'm not spamming, you obviously don't know what spamming is." That would have worked just fine.

Yet, that still isn't directed you at all... just because he's a member of your staff and England said he wouldn't use those services as long as cowmisfit was working there, means he is still directing it at cowmisfit, not at fr0zenhost, OR you. Like England said, you're making something out of nothing... so shut up.
