Alright, I'm currently installing Linux on my sister's computer, but when I boot up the installation form in... Well, I don't know if it's DOS, but it sure looks like it, I get this:

gompshelp

(By the way, that's RedHat 9)

This is at the beginning of installation when you have inserted the first CD I guess.

It seems, it want's you to change the disks. It could be that your CD had a very little error while burning, wich is why the installer doesn't identify the cd as the right CD. I also had problems burning my Red Hat 9 CD's. For some reason all the cd's I burned had small errors wich resulted in something it seems you have know. You can compare the hashes of the CD with what they should be. To see if there are any problems.

Also never ever call that Dos. It's a text Terminal program that starts before the actual kernell is booted, possibly Grub or something. Dos is MS product.

Just out of curiosity, why does your sister want to use Linux?

She doesn't want to, I want her to, heh.

I tried to make a boot floppy disk, but then I red somewhere that making boot disk was not applicable with this version, damn it.

Bad CD-ROM Image. What distro are you using?

Also, it's not DOS, it's Linux in the kernel loading stage right after LILO finished loading the bootstrapper.
