In my quest to make a HTML page using only notepad, I have stumbled upon a problem. Does anyone know how to make non-repeating backgrounds for tables that stretch to fit? I know someone does...

And does anyone have any tips?

lol glyde you aren't going to believe this. I had all you wanted to know written out and ready to submit, but then I couldn't submit it. The connection kept timing out.

Well, here it is AGAIN

To make an image not tile you do this is the css part of your page internal or external:

```
#what you named the div {background-image: url(image.whatever); background-repeat: no-repeat;}
```

Then in html you could just resize the image like so:

```

```

Yes, it is confusing

If you can't submit a message, just copy the text onto a notepad and try again later.

I was going to suggest the same as csskiller.

Add the background via CSS and just slap the "no-repeat" attribute somewhere on it.

This should work:

```
<td style="background-image: url(iframebg.png); background-repeat: no-repeat; background-attachment: fixed">

j_ball430's way is the best/easiest/etc. way with the smallest amount of code, and it's even smaller when you consider the fact that "background-attachment: fixed" needs to be removed since that's only for the body background (keeps the background stationary as you scroll) and doesn't do anything in <TD>.

So this would be all that you need:

```
j_ball430<td style="background-image: url(iframebg.png); background-repeat: no-repeat">
```

Yeah, I figured that wasn't supposed to be in there. Oh well, now it's even smaller as Sir Phoenixx said.
