There is no excuse for putting a bomb link in your signature. For those who are unaware, a bomb link is a URL that sends you to a page that consistently opens new windows usually with someone saying "HEY EVERYBODY I'M LOOKING AT GAY PORNO" really loud. Often times this can crash Windows, or even lock up your system. I've seen that link before and know exactly what it leads to.

The link in his signature is just as ban-worthy as Assprime exploiting the HTML code in the forum so that it would stretch out the pages and fuck up the post views.

Ban him permanently, please.

Why is there any excuse for all the crap you've linked to in n00bstories? All the goatse, all the other shit?

Double standard is the watchword here, folks.

There's a world of difference between Goatse links, which I haven't even seen on these forums (And we're only talking about these you retard), and bomb links which can do irreparable harm to someone's computer.

You're either really fucking stupid, or just really like exaggerating (as if it makes anyone believe you more, lol)

Opening 1 million windows in IE can not cause any sort of "irreparable harm" to your computer..

What do you think it's going to do, make your memory throw its hands in the air and give up?

My apologies - I wasn't aware that system lockups and crashes were conductive to a computer's ability to operate properly. :rolleyes:

Offensive has nothing to do with opening millions of popups that can lock up your system and generally fuck up Windows.

Apparently you're not one of the people that had have to restore Windows, or even reformat their hard drives after a system lockup that damaged the computer.

Bomb sites can easily do this.

I've seen this kind of site over the past four years, it was rather prevalent in the RA2 days. It used to be http://www.iraq.com/bomb or something like that, and now it's this Valve knockoff site. It would get spammed in the official forum and several people would come forward saying it locked their system up, or even damaged Windows.

If you could read, I never said it damaged my system. I never implied that I ever opened the link, either. I've seen that link before and I know what it does. It would be in your best interests not to assume things to use as a sort of pseudo-argument.

Assprime was banned for less than this. I sincerely hope that you're next on the list.

Assuming this is accurate in what WAS there.... http://www.n00bstories.com/image.fetch.php?id=1392269224 , I only have one thing to say.

It specifically says NOT to click on the link, therefore it shouldn't pose a problem. This is sort of like blaming Aircraftkiller for starting fights by him having something in his posts that may entice someone to respond.

That being said though, I'm glad to see it removed, and I hope it stays removed.

Of course, The administration may feel different about the situation.

Subject: j4sp needs to be banned.
Posted by Renx on Sun, 22 May 2005 01:43:13 GMT

Putting a link in your sig and telling people not to click on it is only going to result in twice as many people clicking on it, and we all know that. That fact that it said not to is just an excuse not to get in trouple for it.

If he didn't want people to click on it, it wouldn't of been in his signature in the first place.

I would have been insanely pissed if I had clicked on that link, especially since the "do not click" warning did not adequately express the risk involved. I have edited the forum rules thread to express that these sorts of "bonb" links are expressly forbidden. If j4s[p] or anyone else puts these sorts of links in a thread, signature, or even private message, they are to be banned for a week.

http://www.renegadeforums.com/viewtopic.php?t=19 - updated, though in reading it, I could have easily interpretted "bomb" links as violations of the rules. Now it's more clear, and some of the other rules are updated.

Overall, you guys, and I mean ALL of you really need to treat each other with more respect. The "bomb" link, in the first place, was posted the malicious intent, and if I were a less forgiving person, j4s[p] would have been banned for a week for it.

"assprime" was only banned for a week for the forum exploits, as were all his partners in crime. Any further banning of him is unrelated.

No matter what, bomb links should be forbidden to even have showing on these forums. Bomb links are hazordous, and like ACK said, can crash your pc and lock it up. Some bomb links lead you straight to viruses and such. I know from experience. Jsp[p] should be suspended from the forums for awhile and forced to get rid of that bomb link. And even he should know that when you say, "Do not click this link", it just makes you want to click it even more. Suspend him, make him get rid of the bomb link, and if he does it again, ban him.

Case closed.

His bomb link is as annoying as your incessant posting of new topics. Yes, it CAN cause damage, but then so could visiting your site. Advertising your site could lead me to getting a virus, so don't even play that bullshit game. It warned you not to click it. If you're that easily ammused, then you're a child. It's like the whole "DO NOT PRESS THE RED BUTTON", and yet in the show/cartoon, they press the red button. It shows nothing but a lack of self-control. Curiosity killed the cat.
