A couple weeks ago, I took inventory of all the things I was wanting/needing to do on this site and n00bstories, and I went through and categorized everything in order of importance. After some mission-critical bugs and upgrades were completed, I am pleased to let you know that it's now your turn. The most important thing on my to-do list is now skinning these forums to look like our old home.

I plan to get started on this tonight (you know what they say about the best-laid plans) -- Thanks for your patience.

I'm planning to blend the best of the old forums and the best of the new forums. For example the new design will have the forums stretched to fill the screen instead of the column down the center (only you people with real resolutions will notice this)... but I do plan to have the same color scheme as before as far as links, text colors, and background colors. I'll be bringing back the old header image, too.

Could you also leave this default skin up for use as well? With a banner made for it it could be a pretty good already done template extra

I guess some script kiddie decided he likes this theme because his little annoying attacks are wasting my time tonight. Sorry.

Crimson, if you don't mind, could you also see if you could disable the avatar approval feature? It's rather annoying.

Can there be an option to keep the user info above their post instead of beside it? Because it looks better and doesn't take up as much space where it matters.

The settings have been like that since the first day I installed the boards -- not sure what you're referring to.

I guess it was just kinda acting funny for me. It wasn't working when I first tried to do it. Works now though.

Yep avatar approvals aren't being asked for.
