Just keep learning html as best you can and practice making websites. You will get good, it just takes time. There are people who just don't have a knack for it, but good luck to ya.

STFU, its his first attempt at making a site, so lay off. No reason to be such an asshole to him.

Unfortunatley, most of the people making fun of him will refuse to lay off. :\

TheOuterGalaxy, you can probably make your site better by learning HTML tables and CSS.

I dunno about you guys, but I think his biography is great.

"I've lived in many places in the us becouse my dad was in the military. We got tranfered to Alaska for a year and boy is it cold their it got up to 75 Degress blow 0.
Bust the best thain to look at was the northern lights. The northern lights are lights in the sky its like waves of coler."

By the way, [large name here], model your website on http://www.realultimatepower.net/ It's the best website ever, so you can't go wrong.

I didn't me to totally shat on you... I mean, that is the way I started out too. I suggest you work on your html and then move on to graphics. It will be a great help to you. Don't be a n00b and use premade templates from crappy free template sites. If you are desperate spend 30 bucks and buy a template from one of the guys at http://www.apocmedia.com if you really have problems coding it, someone would probably code it for 30 bucks more. Since your design and layout is so simple I wouldn't suggest this. Learn your stuff on your own.

One word of advise, if you update the web-site be sure it has improved to proper quality if you want to make a completly new post on it. If it hasn't increased that much in quality, just post about the update in this post.

Deadfive knows this, he made every week a complete new post about his website, when he updated it a bit.

Well, to be honest, I still have those old Trielite layouts, and I'd be happy for someone on the web to use them...
