I am in Japan on an exchange program(for 10 days). I have run into a problem 8000 km`s from home and I was wondering if someone could help me. I am using a digital camera to save precious memories which I can hopefully share with others. I am 3 days into the exchange and I have run out of memory. I have taken 400 pictures in 3 days and used almost ALL my memory(256 mg).

Could someone donate me hosting for my photos just until I get back to Canada? I zipped the pictures up in a folder and have gotten it down to under 150 megs I think. It is hard to tell because I am on a japanese computer with a japanese keyboard...

I have gotten SmartFTP installed on the computer here and I am hoping it will work. Can someone lend me some spacing on their server with FTP access?

When I get back to Canada I will post some pictures for everyone to see. I just got back from visiting an Original, 1500 year old castle! The same wooden beams. I gtg. It is late at night and I have lots to do.

Arigato(thanks)

Luke

PS. Sorry about any bad spelling or grammar. I:m on a japanese keyboard and nothing is in the right place. oh and the space bar is MINI!!! lol

Ah I missed the zip bit. slaps self again

Well I'll have a talk with Jake (jball_430) and see if he'll give you any temporary hosting.

Split it into 25MB pieces (WinRAR can do this easily) and upload it at <http://abs.gprime.net>

I will try to get it broken down. It is very hard to do on this computer because EVERYTHING is japanese. I may just burn everything onto a cd and hope it works in canada. My only worry is that something will be written onto the cd in a different format then on canadian computers. They are images I dont want to lose.

Is there any difference in the way infomation is burnt on a CD? I know they are zipped up the same and are the same lying in a folder but would a canadian and japanese CD read the same? Im thinking a japanese burner might record the information differently.

Thanks for the support/opinions and sorry about the late reply. The group I was with went on a two day trip to the Sea Of Japan. Salt water tastes GROSS!

I think i found out a way to help you. There is a website, called Streamload.com. This website is free, and allows you to upload your files, up to a certain amount of data. Put them in a .ZIP folder, and upload them. Hell, if you dont want to go through the hassle of getting an account, ill give you mine if its still up.

Reminds me of times when my family hosted trips for Japanese teenagers. Sorry I can't offer you space, but have fun while you're over there!

Well I got back to Canada okay and I had burnt my photos on a CD. All went well and the formats must be the same. I copied the pictures onto several computers at my house and they are all safe and sound in Canada.

Just thought I would fill you in on how it went.

<http://www.megaupload.com/>

Allows file up to 500mb.

(You can also password protect the zip it if you don't want anyone downloading it.)
