And not surprisingly the denial:

<http://www.albawaba.com/en/countries/Iraq/231723>

If a strike is made against Iran, gas prices would soar sky high, destroy the Middle East, crush economies, and bring in years and decades of war and suffering with seemingly no end to the violence.

The works of man are all in vain. May God bless us all.

And let's not forget the worsening crisis with Russia and Georgia...both nations are preparing for war.

If Israel bombs Iran, Russia will probably go after Israel, and this could probably happen. Granted, it was written in the 80s and some things might be off, but it looks like a very real possibility.

I seriously doubt anything is going to happen. To paraphrase George Carlin, what we are witnessing is nothing but a multi-billion dollar prick waving competition. Iran threatens Israel, so Israel has to threaten them back, and then Iran ups the ante with a missile launch (which was nothing spectacular anyway).

First off, Ahmadinejad is merely playing 'politics of the street' , something which isn't new in the Middle East, and he's definitely taking a page from Nasser's book. He likes to give loud speeches, and speak like he's one of the people, when in reality, he's a paper tiger.

Here's the real reason why Ahmadinejad is being a sandy butthole:

Iran's economy blows ass.

Simply put, he's trying to divert attention from Iran's poor performance, a strategy that has been done to death by guys like Nasser. Ahmadinejad knows that going to war with Israel and America would be a big mistake for obvious reasons, so he'll continue to be full of bluster, but he'll never act.

If anything, Ahmadinejad is trying to detract influence from Saudi Arabia, a country that is the big player in the Middle East, and has a majority Sunni population, as opposed to Iran's Shiite population.

Secondly, Russia and China sit on the UN Security Council, and will deter any action whatsoever.

The United States has seen what results 'unilateral action' can produce, and so has the rest of the world. Therefore, if a war is desired, the United States will have no choice but to pursue a multilateral approach, and you can bet your ass that no sane country will want to join the Americans on another Middle Eastern jaunt while they still have yet to finish the other two ventures.

Israel COULD go it alone, but I doubt they'll get much support from anyone, including the United States. The American people are tired of the Middle East, and tired of the idiocy surrounding the region... and seeing as it's presidential election season, the candidate who takes the strongest position against Israel will definitely benefit from disgruntled voters.

Edit: And who is this 'God' dude?

EDIT: Here's more.

All anyone really has to do to cripple Iran is bomb their nuclear program, including all their power plants, uranium and plutonium enriching facilities, etc. They've got all their money invested in that, destroying that is basically like burning up all their cash.

Quote:

War makes a lot of money, but that money goes towards the companies (weapons companies, security companies like Blackwater, banks, etc.) involved in the war. Not the society. The 500 billion dollars spent from the tax payer's pockets could've had better use that actually helped America as a whole.

500 billion dollars is $2,147 per American.

Imagine that kind of money going into schools, health care, security in America, charity, streets, communities, and stuff that actually matters. Instead of going to war, losing over 4000 U.S soldiers, and over a million Iraqis.

Of course though, this is all worth it, because the U.S had to disarm Saddam's weapons of mass destructions (which did not exist) and hamper his links to Al Qaeda (which also did not exist) and stabilize the Middle East (which is now far more unstable than before the war)

And yes, we need to bomb Iran back to the stone age, because Israel (which has one of the best armies in the world and can defend itself) is worth another more thousands of U.S lives, billions of more U.S dollars, more hundreds of thousands of Iranian lives, and inevitably more Israeli lives.

And if one of them was you, then you wouldn't be saying anything for sure.

Even if only 1 U.S soldier was killed, it would still be too much for the nonexistent weapons of mass destruction.

Oh and by the way, that's 4000 U.S soldiers dead. If you want to talk about the amount injured in battle, we're talking over 30,000, many of which are crippled for life. As for Iraqis, that's over one million dead as I had said previously. Doesn't include those countless Iraqis who are injured, in dungeons like Abu Ghraib, in captivity, or forced to move out of their country (now over 2 million).

It's not in Iran's interest to go after the West. Heck, trade between the United States and Iran has increased almost ten-fold under Bush's two terms.

I'm going to stand by my previous comments. So far, nothing extraordinary between Iran, and Israel has occurred in the past few days, and I will bet money that nothing will.

you say "iran hates america" as if that makes them the bad guys instead of us (the west), we've done infinitely more to fuck with them than they have with us. as for peace between iran and the US, iran's already made genuine efforts to ensure peace, bush rejected it and then the US government lied to the world about whether it even happened.

as for building a nuke, pawkyfox is correct - you hear lying pieces of shit like cheney saying stuff like why would Iran need nuclear energy when they have oceans of oil - Iran went to the US years ago and pointed out the fact they need to export shitloads of oil and don't have enough for an energy program. US supported that. cheney and rumsfeld were in office at the time.

however, since the US is already sponsoring terrorism inside iran and since it's hardly a secret the US has already decided there's going to be a war with iran, suddenly anybody's surprised iran might WANT a nuke? what a weird perversion of cause and effect.

oh, and as for ahmedinajed's "wipe israel off the map" comment, please don't tell me anyone here still believes that lie no, but then it's not a good idea for america to have nuclear weapons either. two points on that: iran isn't trying to get nuclear weapons, america already has them and so does israel (after lying about that for decades, then locking up the guy who busted that lie for about 20 years, and then refusing to sign any treaty to limit their use). secondly, iran doesn't want a war with america, america does want a war with iran.

I doubt Iran wants a war with either Israel or America. Ahmedinejad visited America twice not too long ago, and expressed that all nuclear weapons should be banned, and that the UN should be looking into making that ban.

I'm sure Israel wants a war with Iran, and that America (under whatever administration) will step aside and let it happen, though either way it won't be a good idea. Iran has major influence over southern and central Iraq, as well as Lebanon. Any Israeli or American lead attack on Iran would result in a jump in the insurgency in Iraq, and probably another war between the Lebanese and Israel.

Well, nothing has happened still, and it now seems that Ahmadinehad could likely lose his presidency in a little while. Ali Larijani, the most public face, and leader of Iran's nuclear negotiation team is gearing up to replace Ahmadinejad in the upcoming election.

Already, Larijani seems to be the favorite of Ali Khamenei, who is the top-dog in Iran, and the conservatives within Iran are very upset with Ahmadinejad's horrible economic policies, and militant foreign policy.

It also helps that Larijani is a pragmatist who is generally unencumbered by ideology, and wants a solution to this nuclear situation.

This is probably why the US is slowly reaching out diplomatically... once Ahmadinejad is out of the picture, and Larijani is in, America will likely create more diplomatic ties with Iran.

This article by Time is a decent summation of what is likely going to happen within the next year or two.

This is why I take a lot things to do with the Middle East with a grain of salt. So much of it is bluster, and political posturing, and it has been that way since the 1early 1900's.

pawkyfox wrote on Thu, 07 August 2008 18:17That's great...but I have a feeling that if the higher-ups in the Iranian govt want a nuclear Iran, then pushing out Ahmadinejad and bringing in a moderate will buy them ample loads of time with the West.

I'm sure they will get Nuclear plants, and I have a feeling in a few years, those reactors will likely be General Electric, or Westinghouse reactors built in the good ol' USA.

I believe Iran wants guarantees, and money to operate a civilian nuclear program, and I think the US will let them have it, but with American or Canadian reactors that render the waste ineffective for a nuclear bomb. The big nuclear deal between India, and America will likely set a precedent too.
