How many of you watched it? If so, what did you think?

Personally, I think Sarah Palin seemed a bit phony in her attempts to seem "down-home" and when she winked at the camera, just plain creepy. I also found it interesting that she was openly refusing to answer the questions the moderator presented to her; she seemed to be obsessed with talking about her energy policies in the "huge state" of Alaska more than anything. Another thing that stood out to me was Biden's statement that we have spent more money on Iraq in three weeks than we have in our entire campaign in Afghanistan. To me, it just seems wrong that we have spent more on a seemingly unprovoked war than we have in the war against a group that attacked our citizens on our own soil.

Biden is an idiot. Plain and simple.

"Humans caused Global Warming." He actually said that, which shows just how out of touch he is.

I started watching it. Made it about an hour through... then the next thing I realized, I was waking up on my couch at 5 AM.

By the way, for any of you who even care, the debates happened not too far from where I live (St. Peters). So yea, I have bragging rights.

I thought it was fairly accurate having watched the debate... everything she said basically seemed recited from a prepared set of notes... also, I haven't really read/watched anything about her since the debate, so the media has nothing to do with it.

I believe he's referring to the 2000 election, where Al Gore really won, but Jeb Bush (Governor of Florida at the time) made sure his brother won the election instead. It's possible that this scenario could occur yet again, though it's not very likely to happen.

Damn family ties. Lets get that asshole... Just shut up, you made your self look like a total idiot. Just because his brother was governor of the state doesn't mean that he helped his bro get elected. Where do you people come up with stuff like this? You are voting for a guy who took the top executives of Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac who made huge amounts of money doing it, and put them on his election committee. Now tell me that's not some major ass covering.

I personally don't care what anyone thinks of me.

That being said, I simply say it as I see it, and I'm sorry that you don't see that as a possibility, given the fact that it really was only Florida that separated Gore from Bush in the 2000 election. I believe we would've done far better with Gore as president anyway.

Yes, we would have. 9/11 happens. Gore spends 5 months dithering around with what to do with the ALMIGHTY UN, then decides to launch maybe a couple of cruise missiles. Look how far that got Bill Clinton.

lol, I like Ron Paul and all, I even voted for him in the primary but he in no way won the Republican primaries. I think he placed second in a couple states like Montana and Nevada but in terms of pure votes and more importantly delegates, he was way behind McCain, Romney, and even Huckabee.

Got any hard proof of that? Or do you just have a partisan hatred of Bush? I mean I don't like him either but ultimately the Supreme Court decided the issue with Bush v. Gore.

Your ignorance continues to astound me. Immediately following 9/11, a French newspaper declared, "We are all Americans." There was a worldwide consensus in favor of American military action. You're a fucking goddamn retard if you think Gore wouldn't have done the same thing as Bush (at least as far as AFGHANISTAN IS CONCERNED!)

It wasn't until Bush's unilateral invasion of Iraq, a war which was founded on entirely incorrect precepts, that world opinion turned against us.

Oh, and apparently you're not aware that the neocons CRITICIZED Bill Clinton for "wasting his time" trying to hunt down bin Laden during his administration. Once 9/11 happened, those same hypocrites turned around and criticized him for "not doing ENOUGH" to hunt him down.

Would you fucking get a grip on reality?
