I made this thread a long time ago...

I made it a rule that mods couldn't win.

But that didn't stop a mod from editing my first post, changing the rule and then locking the thread

HSotD was only looking promising during the first episode.

Then it dropped dramatically.

Also, have you heard of Bakemonogatari?

I haven't seen either, but the story line for Bakemonogatari was rather interesting, and the prequel/sequels coming should be good.
I don't really look at directors and the ilk, I judge it based on what I see.

And this is why lucky star is fucking awful

M0FiR3 wrote on Mon, 10 January 2011 03:14 the kid that watches 9000 hours of anime a day pretends he doesn't know .. i still don't know what gender the person in your own avatar is ... A couple things here:

1. Failed attempt at meme humor (Or perhaps you didn't realize what you said?) (Over 9,000!)
2. Where exactly did you develop the idea that I am supposedly obsessed with anime to begin with? The only thing that relates anime as an interest of mine is my avatar. There are other people on this forum that are apparently way more open to their interest in it... so why single me out? Do you have a crush on me or something? I'm flattered but unfortunately I don't swing that way.
3. I'm not pretending, I really don't know. It isn't uncommon for characters to share characteristics of the opposite sex (ARTISTICALLY, NOT biologically). The first time I saw Edward in Cowboy Bebop I thought she was a boy.
4. Shana, as seen in my avatar, is a girl from the anime Shakugan no Shana.

And to be honest, it isn't like I really, really love Shakugan no Shana (which is actually the name of the sword she uses, so don't go getting the wrong idea). I do like the show, sure, but it isn't like a master piece or anything. I just like her character design and that's why it's my avatar. (Flaming swords are cliché, but flaming girl is something new to me.)

I have used avatars of characters from shows and sources I've never seen before. In fact my last avatar, which was this one (I think):

is Miku Hatsune, and she isn't from an anime at all. She is actually a singing synthesizer computer program. (Think of her sort of like a singing version of Microsoft Sam). I've never used the program, but I like her design and that's all that I really care about.

The point is, my avatar isn't a window for my likes and dislikes. It's just there to look cool.

I used to be in a really huggy group.

But then I realized they were just a bunch of "anime fans" who watch little anime and who fangirl over everything.

Because the men just sat there and said as little as possible.

That could be used as an argument for both Coke lovers or Pepsi lovers.

- If you like Coke, then it shows the dude wasting Coke.
- If you like Pepsi, then it shows the dude contaminating the Pepsi.

Holy crap. I'm trying to install C&C3 on my computer... and it's been at it for almost over 3 hours now! The progress bar is moving INCREDIBLY slow.

What's more is that I just installed all but TD, RA1 and Generals from my TFD disk as well as Red Alert 3 all in a very short amount of time each.

...wtf?!
