TheGunrunHey does any one have any info about that asteroid that has a 1 out of 909,000 chance of hitting earth in 2014?

1/909000

That's a 0.00000001% chance. Not something I would lose sleep over.

Asteroids have always "threatened" Earth, and that's not going to change in the near future. If by some chance an asteroid actually is on a collision course, no one is going to pull any Armageddon heroics. Basically we'd all be screwed anyway, so there's no point in worrying about it.

Think about this:

If our entire existance if about to be wiped out in a few hours, would we want to be informed about it and start to panic, or just wait until it hits and be killed without even knowing we were going to die?

We might could smack it with enough nukes to split it into fragments and only have small particles hit Earth. But we really don't have to worry about it. If the government really believed we were all gonna die in 2004 you still wouldn't know about it.

I need to double check my facts and I forget the exact distance, but to put the thousands of Kilometers (or miles) that the closest meteor was from Earth into perspective....
I believe it travelled BETWEEN the Earth and the moon.

Actually...

Mars' atmosphere contains VERY LITTLE oxygen. Mars' atmosphere is made up of 95% Carbon Dioxide, with only .13% Oxygen. Earth's atmosphere is made up of around 80% Nitrogen and only 20% Oxygen.

John Shaft Jr.Hmmmm.. its a small chance that it will happen.

But If it does happen I know what I'm going to do. I'm going to tell one of my bosses to kiss my ass and then quit. Max out my Credit Cards and throw the biggest "Earth Ended" Party ever!!!!

And I can see it now. Since nothing ever works out the way I wanted, the next day the Asteroid passes over earth. I'll Be like, "DAMN IT!!! NOTHING EVER WORKS OUT FOR ME!!!!"

Yes, but what happens if you're a organ donor and you come back to life with no eyes.

On the serious side, why can't we attach chemical rocket engines to these things and over a month or two, adjust it's trajectory to either collide with something else (another threatening meteor), or to send them into the sun?

Space is a vacuum you know and a body that is in motion stays in motion. so as long as you can match the speed and velocity and THE BILLIONS OF DOLLARS it will take and luck you could do that. but the motion of the meteor could be so great that the rockets could actually bring the meteor into a spin so instead of one impact we might get millions more. oh and that asteroid heading for earth is small as a mountain so the damage would be smaller than the extinction one that killed the dinosaurs.

A meteor cannot be any larger than around 330 feet (about 100 megaton, which would be just large enough to destroy an area the size of a city like Tokyo), anything larger than this is an asteroid.

I've looked at that second one, and the only thing it said about it's size is that it's like a "Small mountain", now how the hell large is a "small mountain"?

TheGunrunoh and that asteroid heading for earth is small as a mountain so the damage would be smaller than the extinction one that killed the dionosoures.

Like 95% of our electronics come from Japan, and alot of the cars come from Japan (or are at least they're Japanese owned). And don't forget all of those short people, we'd lose half of the worlds population of midgets! (j/k)

Well, at least one good thing would come out of it, at least there won't be anymore anime!!!
